Product costing tool

Project engagement, alongside server administration

Built for a small trading sole proprietorship, where the owner and one employee calculate cost from the product list, purchase price, materials, and labor. I confirmed the data they needed and built the costing tool myself, replacing the manual calculation.

- Handed the tool to the owner and the employee. One item now takes a few minutes instead of about an hour by hand.
- Designed the data model and REST API. Implemented the calculation in C# and ASP.NET Core, and stored data in PostgreSQL with EF Core.
- Built the input screen in Angular with a responsive layout so cost can be calculated from a phone.
- Covered the formulas with unit tests and, before handover, checked the results against a manual calculation on control items.

Server and plugin administration

Part-time, in parallel with project development

Administered Linux servers and maintained plugins: updated configuration and ran services in Docker. After each release I checked that the service worked, and I kept configuration changes in Git so a failed check could be rolled back.

Project administration

Project work, April–December 2025

Ran small C# and .NET projects: split requirements into tasks and carried changes through to release. Moved the work in short Agile iterations with Scrum and Kanban.

About

Junior C#/.NET developer with 1.5 years of experience. I carry a task from requirements and design through implementation, verification, and release. With C#, ASP.NET Core, and Angular I built a product costing tool and cut the calculation for one item from about an hour to a few minutes.
